PLANNING YOUR TRIP

WHERE? Like notches on Orion's Belt, the cities of Las Vegas, Mesquite and St. George form a linear constellation of stellar vacation getaways. Their relative close proximity to one another makes it easy to enjoy each locale separately or take on all three for the full tour Nevada and Utah's very best golf courses and lodging options. Fly into Vegas for a couple days and then head up I-15 to Mesquite and a half-dozen of Nevada's best courses packed into the small city. Continue up I-15, across Arizona's northwest corner and into Utah, for a selection of golf and lodging amongst the region's otherworldly landscape.

WHEN? June through August, when it's hot enough to fry an egg on the Las Vegas Strip, it's best to spend your time taking in a show or lounging around one the many sprawling pool compounds found at the city's mega-hotels. But in the fall and winter months, temperatures rarely exceed 80 degrees, making for an absolutely perfect time to enjoy the area's many desert golf courses. While Las Vegas lays claim to the best restaurants and nightlife, Mesquite, located just an hour northeast, is Nevada's unofficial golf capital with seven incredible courses within its borders. Two other can't-miss plays, Sand Hollow and Coral Canyon, are just a short drive to St. George.

WHY? A Nevada or St. George vacation is never a gamble. While Las Vegas enjoys a reputation as the state's gaming and nightlife hotspot, there are several other Nevada options that offer a wealth of spectacular golf courses, great hotels and amenities that make for an ideal buddy or family vacation. Take Mesquite for instance, where nearly a dozen world-class golf courses and four outstanding resorts await Colorado snowbirds. Or travel less than an hour northeast across the border to St. George. There you'll find a selection of top-notch golf courses, like the new Sand Hollow Resort, and hotels, such as The Inn at Entrada, that are all tucked into a stunning red-rock scenery.
